CHARACTERS IN THIS DICTIONARY

ARRANGED BY THEIR RADICALS.

In this Index, the figures placed above each character show the page on which it occurs; and these numbers are arranged so that the characters under each radical, having the same number of strokes, follow each other in alphabetical order; the figures on the right side of the column in heavy type, shows how many strokes, not including the radical itself, are in each character following it. The sound of each character, where it is known, is given in the Canton, Amoy, and Shanghai dialects in that order, according to a uniform system of spelling.

LIST OF DIFFICULT CHARACTERS.

THE following table contains a selection of all the characters occurring in the preceding Index whose radicals are not very obvious, being combined with other parts or placed in unusual positions. They are arranged in classes by the whole number of their strokes in a regular series; the figures after each one denote its radical and additional strokes in the Index. Characters in which the difficulty of finding their place chiefly consists in the choice of the right radical out of two or three, as 攻 or 矧, are not often inserted.

LIST OF THE FAMILY SURNAMES OF THE CHINESE,

BOTH SINGLE AND DOUBLE.

THE following list has been collected from the common school-book known as the 百家姓 or Family Surnames, and from K'ang-hi's Dictionary; those contained in the former, numbering 408 單姓 or single surnames, and 30 複姓 or 雙姓 double surnames, are distinguished by being printed in italics. Probably four-fifths of the people are called by these surnames, the rest being seldom used or extinct. Native authors have carefully investigated their origin, and traced them back, in some cases more than three thousand years, to the time when they are first mentioned. A few tens of those contained in this list are characters not found in this Dictionary, their use being almost confined to that of a proper name; a few others, like Feu 不 or Hang 汗, take a different sound when used as surnames. All are arranged alphabetically on the same plan as the Dictionary. When mentioning their surnames, the Chinese have a custom of dissecting the parts, so as the better to define it when there is any doubt; 二馬馮 two-horse Fung; 木子李 wooden-son Li; 弓長張 bow-long Chang; 立早章 stand-early Chang; 文武武 Wăn-Wu Wu; &c.

In writing Chinese proper names in Roman letters, the sing and ming should be carefully distinguished as two names, as noted on page 810, and not printed as one word, as is often done to their utter confusion. The Manchus were required by the Emperor K'anghi to use only their ming in writing their names in Chinese, so that the sing is known only among themselves, like a kind of clan sign; such names, therefore, as Yuen-yuen or O-keh-tun-pu are properly written in one word, as much as Benjamin or Christopher, though the syllables may be separated for convenience of pronunciation.

ERRATA AND CORRECTIONS.

SINCE the issue of the first edition of this book in 1874, its merits have been fairly discussed, its deficiencies pointed out, and its errors set forth by several friendly critics and scholars. Their suggestions will by useful to those who may, by and by, undertake a similar work. From their remarks the following list has been mostly selected, as containing the errors most desirable to be corrected. As their notices are scattered here and there, their intentions in making them will be promoted by bringing them together. In respect to the explanation of the construction of characters, a reference may be made to page xlviii. of the Introduction, where the object is stated; some mistakes were made in discriminating the component parts, but the main design was to aid beginners to remember the leading portions of characters, rather than to give all their etymologies. In addition to the dialects given in the Index, Miss A. M. FIELDE, of the American Baptist Mission at Swatow, has published a complete list of the sounds of all the characters in that dialect, including many variants; and Mr. JAMES ACHESON, of the Imperial Customs, has issued another list giving the Peking sounds according to Sir T. F. WADE'S Progressive Course. All sinologues will be thankful for these lists. A full collection of the vocables in the best defined and leading dialects in the empire will furnish accurate materials for comparisons and deductions, which may enable some philologist, like GRIMM or WHITNEY, to ascertain the genesis of Chinese pronunciation, and the laws which govern its perplexing changes.

148² The 鮒 is a carp; the name includes similar species of soft finned fish, of which some sorts are known as 鯽魚; they are served up at wedding feasts.

155³ The expression 馬牛風 is said of persons who avoid meeting, or who cannot see each other; 風流 is also used in the sense of accomplished, elegant.

182³ The 蝦 is the toad; it is often eaten.

210¹ The 鶫 is the book name of the Chinese blue jay (Urocissa sinensis), also called blue magpie.

217² The composition of 合 is 口 mouth and 亼 triangle, indicating union; the latter element also occurs in 侖 on page 565¹; in 會 on page 264²; in 舍 on page 748¹; in it is explained on page 985¹ under 集 to assemble.

217¹ The 鶡鷄 is the eared pheasant (Crossoptilon auritus) or Pallas' pheasant; the name is commonly written 火鷄 fire cock, which may be a mistake of the proper characters from the similarity of sound.

220¹ The 貉 is the raccoon dog (Nyctereutes procyonoides) also known as 菓子狸 or fruit cat and 窩狐 or cave fox; the primitive in 貉 is simply phonetic.

224³ A 虎臂 or tiger's shoulder, also means a hidden ledge or rocks in a rapid.

225² The 桑扈 or 扈鳥 is a general term for finches, bull-finches, Java sparrows, &c. (Eophona and Coccothraustes), otherwise called 蜡嘴鳥 or wax-bills, as a general designation.

228¹ Erase, under 栩, soft, pliable; flexible wood easily bent. A misprinted character in Kanghi caused the mistake.

246³ The character 丸 is the reversed form of 仄 the side of.

297² The example in the 10th line is better rendered, Though you have it, you would be better without it.

320¹ The 13th line is better rendered, The wife of my poverty shall not leave the hall.

330¹ The 雉喽兒 is a name for the curlew (Numenius) in Chihli province.

337³ The 麂 of Kiangnan is the river deer (Hydropotes inermis) which has tusks similar to the musk deer.

340³ The 花鯚魚 is the mandarin fish (Siniperca chua-tsi) a kind of perch; another species, the 黃鯚魚 is the Siniperca chuan-tsi; both found in Chihli.

340³ The 記室 is also a secretary in an office.

348³ At bottom. The phrase 習氣 is applied to habit, custom, temper, manner; nature of, as a soil

349¹ The expression 棄市 is a euphuism for decollation; the execution-ground in Peking is in a vegetable market.

503² A synonym of 懶 is 嬾; both forms are common.

563³ Under 踪, the last phrase is also written 打一個轂轆 referring to the turns of a pulley.

518¹ The 野狸 is the tarai (Felis viverrina), which resembles the wild cat; but in Chihli, the 野狸子 is the cat of the steppes (Felis manul).

546³ The phrase 酒令 denotes a rule imposed at a feast in respect of drinking.

574¹ The 蠻夷 are also known as 八蠻 because eight tribes were reckoned on all sides of China; 蠻悍 also means rowdy; rude, as a bully.

590¹ The 麅 is more probably the tailed deer (Elaphurus Davidianus), once common in northern China, and called 四不像 at Peking.

613² The phrase 奈不過 rather means, Unable to bear it.

619¹ The term 哀子 is properly applied to motherless sons.

628³ The 鱷魚 is the alligator found in the Yang-tsz' River; but the term has been extended as generic to include other great saurians.

633² line 16. The whole sentence from the Analects will make this clearer:—不曰白乎涅而不緇 Is it not said, that if a thing be white, it may be muddied, and still not be blackened?

639¹ bottom. For 挼沙 read 挼挲 to crumple up; see page 814¹ bottom. Under 狃 after a fox's footsteps, add the fox, from its being wry-footed.

647¹ The 八仙桌子 is a table for eight persons to dine at, sometimes square, sometimes octagonal.

650² middle. The phrase 班師 also means to deploy a force; to withdraw troops and avoid a battle. The expression just below, 班行天下 is likewise written 頒行天下 with the same meaning.

664² The composition of 保 is apparently from man and stupid; but the primitive is altered from 孚 to trust to.

665¹ The 抱 is more than an arm's length; it is a fathom or the extended arms. The 豹 also denotes the Felis Fontanierii or North China panther. The proverb quoted under it is better rendered, You've looked at the leopard through a tube, — and saw only one spot; i. e. you have a partial acquaintance with the matter.

684¹ bottom. Correct to, To see one off, as to his chair.

685² The 鼈 popularly includes sea turtles along the Kwangtung coast, but there and in the north it properly denotes soft-shelled Cheloniæ (Emys, Trionyx, &c.), the turtle is sometimes called 玳瑁 in books.

688² The phrase 便衣 also denotes in undress, unrobed; applied to officials.

692¹ The composition of 畢 is 田 a field above 革 a refuse-basket; it is supposed to delineate a field-basket; some explain the upper part as altered from 由 giving the sound fuh.

697¹ middle. The phrase 認你所爲 should read 認憑你所爲 and transferred to page 702².

693¹ middle. The phrase 筆氣壯雄 means a bold hand, a vigorous style. — The fish 鮂 on the same page is a rudd or roach (Leuciscus), and common all over China.

706³ middle. The phrase 磅礴 is similar to the one here quoted, in its form, and means easy, unconstrained.

613¹ The composition of 步 is 止 to stop and 少 the same reversed, indicating a quick stride.

714³ The last sentence under 哺 reads in full 羊羔跪乳烏鴉反哺, lambs kneel to suckle, crows disgorge for their dams;—nature herself teaches filial piety.

717³ The composition of 僕 is 人 man and 業 thick underbrush altered, denoting troublesome; it is sometimes wrongly written like 業 an estate.

733¹ The term 山人 also means a priest; as 山門 does a temple.

736¹ The character 申 is formed of 臼 two hands with 丨 a down stroke, as if one braced himself; it is supposed to represent the yin principle in full action in the seventh moon.

740² The phrase 無常鬼, the unusual demon, refers to a human soul which arrests wicked spirits on earth, while its own body is inanimate; this explanation is given as the reason of a cataleptic fit. The 鱨 is referred to the Pseudobagrus fulvidraco, a kind of silure or sheatfish with two cirri, also called 黃頰魚 yellow cheek fish and 黃顙魚 yellow temples fish; it makes a curious creaking sound like 軋軋 ya-ya.

741³ The character 尙 is composed of 向 towards and 八 eight above.

746¹ The phrase 韶華 is better, Splendid, as the fading life of man and its glories.

750¹ The 諼 denotes the third gathering of tea leaves. Under 涉 on same page, the phrase 跋涉勿動 is better rendered, I have never traveled much.

754³ To play chess or other games like it, is a metaphorical meaning of 手談, as well as to teach or talk with the fingers.

766² near top. Correct 打把丨 to 打把式 and put it on the next page.

770³ The 鼯 includes the striped squirrel (Sciurus Davidianus) and the North China squirrel (Sc. striatus).

778² The 術家 also includes geomancers, magicians, soothsayers, clairvoyants, &c.

779² The expression 不自檢束 means, He puts no restraint on himself; reckless, lost to decency.

785³ The character 帥 is formed of 巾 napkin and an old form of 堆 to pile up, which refer to putting the handkerchief in the girdle.

789¹ bottom. A better version is, Either they are twice, or they are five times [as many.]

790³ top. The terms 細小 and 細君 are both also used for a wife by her husband only.

791² The name 湘妃竹 given to the speckled bamboo alludes to the tears wept at Shun's grave by his two sister wives. See Mayers' Manual, page 165.

835³ The composition of 虒 is 虎 a tiger and 厂 to drag, which gives the sound.

843² The primitive 翉 is formed of 羽 wings under 曰 to cover contracted to resemble 曰 to speak.

861³ bottom. The phrase 儻來之物 indicates that the thing came by a wrong road; ill-gotten gains.

876¹ bottom. The phrase 無頭公案 also means a charge against some person unknown.

876³ top. The third example is better rendered, Half a sentence is too much if not spoken to the point.

884¹ The 鯰 is recognized as the sheatfish (Silurus asotus) of European rivers, sometimes seen five feet long in China.

896³ The components of 奠 are 大 altered from 丌 an old form of 基 a foundation, with 酋 a form of 酒 spirits above it for worship.

905² The lower half of 定 is 正 correct reduced to an earlier form 疋 with a straight top line.

912¹ The 鮀 and 鼉 are synonyms, and especially denote the Alligator sinensis found in the Yangtsz' river.

113² The 鷐 is the 沙鷄 sand grouse (Syrrhaptes paradoxus) of the northern Desert.

917² near top. For spindle-tree read, A solitary russet pear tree.

922² The 五毒 likewise denote the five legal punishments.

928¹ top. The bricks are also called 白不子 by potters; see Julien's Porcelaine, page 251. In col. 2, line 21, the phrase also means in mandarin, The time of a meal, a short space; indicating that one has no leisure at all. The other signification is common at Canton.

934³ The two parts of 童 are really derived from 辛 a crime and 重 heavy contracted; and from 立 and 里 only in appearance.

937[1] The expression 短見 is a euphuism for suicide; as is also 自裁 on page 943[2] near top.

939[1] The character 帀 is the original form of 之 to sprout turned upside down.

945[1] Under 簪 the character 匕 a spoon should be 匕 to change, which is 化 contracted.

962[1] Under 奏, the character 本 should be 夲 to enter hastily.

992[1] Under 正寢 which properly means a man's death chamber, add 內寢 which denotes more strictly that of a woman's.

1001[2] The 鰍 is the loach (Cobitis), called also 泥魚 mud fish; it somewhat resembles an eel, and is called 鰌 in books, and 泥毬兒; the latter a northern name.

1020[3] The 鼬 is a striped ground squirrel (Sciurus striatus) common in Chihli.

1027[2] The character 爨 is composed of 火 fire at bottom with 廾 two hands pushing 林 wood beneath 冂 a furnace mouth over which is an 甗 earthern pot or stove held by two hands; it is one of the most complicated ideographs in the language, and has two modified, simpler forms.

1044[2] The primitive of 往 is not really 主 lord, but a modified form of 罒 underbrush, which gives the sound.

1057[2] The phrase 二女㜷 means, Two women waited [on Shun]; they were the daughters of Yao.

1058[1] bottom. The example 莫黑匪烏 should be rendered, Nothing black besides crows [are seen].

1059[2] The sixth example should be rendered, There really was no reason [for the act].

1065[3] middle. The phrase 物色 has a wider application; to detect, to find, to search out.

1071[2] The first example under 陽 also means, On the throne, when he was reigning.

1073[1] The sentence 無關痛癢 is rather, His pains and itchings don't hurt me; we've no common interests.

1074[3] top. The phrase 奈恙何 is used by doctors for, I fear it is all over with him; lit. remedy the disease how?

1077[3] The character 要 is apparently formed of west and woman; but the original form is derived from 臼 the hands clasping the body above 交 to join contracted, giving the sound.

1083[3] The composition of 言 is from 口 mouth with 辛 a fault above it, much contracted.

1087[1] The 鼷 is the 地拍 or 地拍鼠 the ground rat, (Scaptochirus moschatus) a small mole common in Chihli and North China.

1092[2] bottom. The 鵹 has also been defined the chough (Fregilus graculus), for which 紅嘴鴉 or red billed raven is the Peking raven.

1094[1] The composition of 睪 is apparently 目 eye over 幸 lucky; but the primitive is an old form of 夲 to scare. See also 圍 on page 1126[3].

1093[3] The game referred to under 弈 is the 圍碁 or game of war or blockade, here incorrectly called chess; Mr. Giles has given an account of it in Temple Bar, January, 1877.

1100[1] The component parts of 音 are 言 words with one in mouth, alluding to modulations in music.

1106[2] The tassel on an official hat is 馬纓; and the silk tree 絨花樹 (Julibrissin) seems to have the fitting name of 馬纓花 tassel flower sometimes applied to it.

1115[1] The phrase 坐又不安 is better rendered, Neither could he sit easy.

1116[2] The 貂 probably denotes the polecat (Putorius Fontanierii and sebiricus) for which 黃鼠 is another name.

1120[2] The second form 予 is also used as a common synonym of 與 to give.

1122[3] bottom. A better version is, To thoroughly ascertain the feeling of the people.

1123[1] top. This bird is the eastern jackdaw (Lycos daurica.

1125 bottom. Correct the italics to One debate between two men.

1133[1] Under 原, instead of "but the next form is oldest," read, It is the origin of the next, which is now confined to a spring, and had another form of three fountains under a cliff, now disused.

1135[2] The 爰書 is the record of a case appealed to a higher court, and sent with the prisoner.

1140[1] top. The phrase 抑鬱不伸 is better rendered, Oppressed without remedy; no relief from my misery.

1141 Confucius is said in the Lun-yü not to have trodden on the threshold when entering the court.
